

The New York Times

Making Art Young

By LAUREL GRAEBER

Published: October 12, 2003

“The Met has also become a favorite site for family art hunts...When the latest Harry Potter book came out, Art Smart Adventures sponsored two hunts at the Met for works evocative of Harry’s life at Hogwarts, complete with mysterious clues.”

CHILDREN MAY BE natural artists, but they are not always natural art lovers. Travelers often want to make an art museum one of their first stops in a new city, only to see their children yawn at Impressionist landscapes or declare, after a bored glance at an abstract canvas, that they can paint better. But museums know that young visitors can become passionate about art. It’s all a question of relating the work to the children’s experience, and many institutions nationwide have programs that do exactly that.

The Met has also become a favorite site for family art hunts.... When the latest Harry Potter book came out, Art Smart Adventures sponsored two hunts at the Met for works evocative of Harry’s life at Hogwarts, complete with mysterious clues.